Start of Block: Introduction

Q1 Thank you for participating in a research study conducted by the University of Mannheim. This survey contains questions regarding your political views and persuasions. Your responses will be stored anonymously and kept completely confidential.

It is very important that you pay close attention to the questionnaire. Please note that this survey includes validation questions to check whether you actually take the time to read instructions closely. You may not continue if you do not answer them correctly.

Your participation is voluntary, and you are free to withdraw from the study at any time.

Q59 Please read the following information about the European Union (EU). Please take your time to read it carefully.

Recently, many experts have pointed out that the EU should respond to the pressing demand of the people even if it would endanger its long-term goals. For example, the EU should not impose tough rules on carbon dioxide (CO2) and pollutant emissions without listening to the will of the people, even if these actions are necessary to protect the environment for present and future generations.

A recent study by leading researchers also finds the evidence to support this view using an advanced statistical method. According to this research, the estimate of what they call “responsiveness” of the EU is strikingly lower than many people thought.

The EU will introduce a directive that reforms the current system to handle immigration. This reform is expected to prevent irregular immigrants and improve external border controls. EU countries will have to act to implement this directive in their national law within 20 months. According to the EU treaties, when a country does not adopt a law to transpose the directive, the Commission may refer the case to the Court of Justice of the EU. The Court may then decide on the case and can impose financial penalties on a noncompliant member state.

Accordingly, the Irish government is planning to transpose it into national law. The Irish Taoiseach Leo Varadkar said that this legislation would help to address the serious problem of irregular immigration.
